

National Association of Federally-Insured Credit Unions

March 10, 2022

The Honorable Maxine Waters Chairwoman Committee on Financial Services U.S. House of Representatives Washington, DC 20515 The Honorable Patrick McHenry Ranking Member Committee on Financial Services U.S. House of Representatives Washington, DC 20515

Re: Support for H.R. 7003 – Expanding Financial Access for Underserved Communities Act

Dear Chairwoman Waters and Ranking Member McHenry:

I am writing on behalf of the National Association of Federally-Insured Credit Unions (NAFCU) in support of H.R. 7003, the Expanding Access for Underserved Communities Act, legislation to allow credit unions to add underserved areas to their fields of membership. NAFCU advocates for all federally-insured not-for-profit credit unions that, in turn, serve over 127 million consumers with personal and small business financial service products.

We appreciate the work of the Committee in discussing the Expanding Access for Underserved Communities Act in a series of hearings and considering the legislation for potential markup. It is unfortunate that some banking groups have come out in opposition to this bill, continuing to attack efforts by credit unions to do more to help the underserved rather than focusing on cleaning up their own track record. In the last 15 years, banks have had to pay a staggering $243 billion in fines and penalties for violations of various consumer protection laws and other statutes. At the same time, the 10 largest banks spent $100 billion in just one year buying back shares of their own stock.

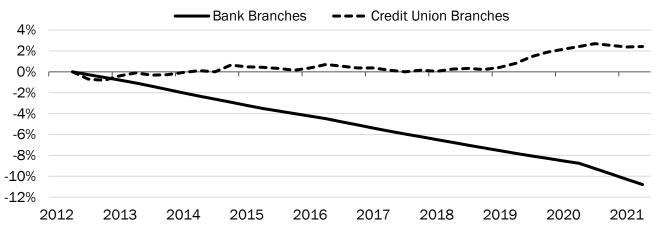

Meanwhile, credit unions have long been a critical provider of financial services to rural and underserved areas. As large and community banks have been shutting down branches and moving out of these areas, credit unions have been stepping up and expanding their presence to fill the void as they are able. In 2019, the Federal Reserve published a study detailing the dramatic decline in bank branches in rural areas. The study showed that 7 percent of rural bank branches were closed between the years 2012 and 2017 and that number grew to 11 percent through 2019. Losses are not only concentrated among large banks, which shuttered 19 percent of their total rural branches, but also among community banks, which lost 5 percent. Credit unions, on the other hand, were the only financial institution type to add branches in both rural and urban areas, demonstrating credit unions' commitment to their members and serving underserved communities.

These numbers have gotten even more staggering over the last two years during the pandemic, with banks closing more than 4,000 branches since March 2020 according to an independent National Community Reinvestment Coalition (NCRC) study. This is a pace of over 200 bank branch closures a month in the last 2 years.

As the chart below shows, the number of bank branches in rural and underserved areas has declined by 10.8 percent since 2012 while the number of credit union branches in those areas has grown by 2.4 percent.

The Honorable Maxine Waters The Honorable Patrick McHenry March 10, 2022 Page 2 of 3

Branches in Rural & Underserved Areas:

Note: Bank data based on FDIC Summary of Deposits branch types 11 & 12

Sources: FDIC, NCUA, NAFCU calculations

While the banking trades might say that credit unions already have the ability to add underserved areas to their fields of membership, they do not mention that not all have that ability, as only multiple common bond credit unions can add underserved areas. Many credit unions want to do more to help underserved areas as banks abandon them and passing legislation to help credit unions fill the void would be a commonsense first step.

The banking trades have long been an opponent of voluntary bank/credit union mergers, and unfortunately used their recent opposition letter to raise this issue again. Bank and credit union mergers are typically a win-win for a local community that may lose its community-focused financial services, or even local employees and branches, if a megabank buys the local community bank. It should come as no surprise that the top trade association for megabanks would oppose these mergers. Credit union-community bank mergers often mean employees retain jobs and branches remain open with a focus on the members in the community. These mergers also cannot occur without approval from the bank's board of directors and both bank and credit union regulators. This is a power that the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA) takes seriously as evidenced by its work on rulemaking in this area. Furthermore, credit unions that merge with a bank retain their credit union characteristics and are still subject to strict statutory prohibitions and limits on powers as set out in the Federal Credit Union Act, including field of membership requirements for the newly acquired bank customers, limits on business lending, a usury ceiling, and the capital limitations of credit unions.

It is duplicitous that the bankers attacked credit unions over their supposed lack of participation in the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) while also attacking credit unions for making small business loans in the first place. Despite this rhetorical discrepancy, NAFCU would like to set the record straight on credit union participation in the PPP program. As you know, credit unions stepped up to ensure small businesses in their communities were taken care of during the initial days of the pandemic, and their response through the PPP was tremendous. Despite the uncertainty surrounding the PPP as it launched and the associated risks, credit unions did all they could to ensure their existing and new small business members were taken care of. According to a NAFCU survey, 87 percent of NAFCU members reported providing PPP loans to new members and businesses that were turned away by banks and came to their credit union to apply for a PPP loan.

The Honorable Maxine Waters The Honorable Patrick McHenry March 10, 2022 Page 3 of 3

Moreover, compared to other types of lenders, credit unions disproportionately helped the smallest of small businesses. An analysis of the Small Business Administration's (SBA) PPP data from the first two rounds shows that credit unions made loans in amounts much lower than the national average. In 2020, the average credit union PPP loan was under $50,000, while the average PPP loan overall was over $100,000.¹ In 2021, the average credit union PPP loan was $33,869, while the average PPP loan overall was $42,000.² Furthermore, according to NAFCU's analysis of SBA's PPP data, a full 75 percent of credit union PPP loans went to businesses with fewer than five employees. While banks are quick to point out that credit unions only deployed 2 percent of all PPP loans, they forget to mention this is because the loan size was so small, going to the smallest businesses. It is the height of hubris that bankers criticize credit unions for providing less PPP money than banks and don't admit that it was because banks gave bigger loans to bigger businesses. The credit union commitment to serving all is also seen in the fact that there are over three times as many minority depository institution (MDI) credit unions as MDI banks.

Banking trades are keen to attack credit unions seeking relief from the arbitrary member business loan (MBL) cap, however they gloss over the fact that credit unions have a cap on these loans at all. An MBL cap serves as a disincentive for many credit unions to focus on small business programs, as successful small business efforts could reach the cap and run into limitations. Small businesses have turned to credit unions after many big banks turned them away during the pandemic. If banks were serious about helping underserved areas, they would not have turned so many customers away that then went to credit unions for help.

It is with these facts in mind that we urge you to reject this recent round of banker rhetoric and support H.R. 7003, the Expanding Access for Underserved Communities Act.

We thank you for the opportunity to share our thoughts on this important issue. Should you have any questions or require any additional information, please contact me or Lewis Plush, NAFCU's Associate Director of Legislative Affairs, at 703-842-2261.

Sincerely,

Brad Thaler

Brad Thaler

Vice President of Legislative Affairs

cc: Members of the House Committee on Financial Services

¹ DuPlessis, Jim, "PPP Helps Businesses and Credit Unions," Credit Union Times (June 15, 2021), available at https://www.cutimes.com/2021/06/15/ppp-helps-businesses-and-credit-unions/.

² Small Business Administration, Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) Report (May 31, 2021), available at https://www.sba.gov/sites/default/files/2021-06/PPP Report Public 210531-508.pdf.